

At the beginning of the video Exhibit DK-1, the viewer can see a black water line in the foreground uplifted off the ground to avoid what appears to be a metal barrier that runs around the green tank battery in the background while the faint sound of running liquid can be heard. At the six second mark, the video moves closer to the black water line and the viewer can clearly hear liquid running through the line. As the video progresses to the 16 second mark the camera moves further down the water line to the joint where the line touches the ground and liquid can still be clearly heard running through the pipe until the video ends at the 24 second mark.